Career Oriented Course (COC)

Certificate Course in Arduino Programming

Course Duration: 40 Hours

Eligibility: B.Sc. II, III Electronics

Objectives:

- To program an Arduino microcontroller
- To interface Arduino with analog and digital sensors (detecting things like light, noise, or pressure)
- To use a software library to control motors, lights, sounds, and more

Requirements:

- Be able to use a computer (Windows and Mac covered in the course, Arduino will also work on Linux)
- Be able to solve simple algebra problems (e.g. find x in $2x+4 = 10$)
- For hands-on, an Arduino and supporting electronics are required

Course Outcomes:-

After completion of the course students will be specialized in Embedded system design using Arduino

About this Course

Arduino Environment

This module provides an introduction to the Arduino environment which is composed of three things: the Arduino board, the Arduino IDE, and the Arduino-compatible shields together with their libraries. We first investigate the board, discussing all of its main components, inputs, and outputs. We discuss how each component is used and we examine the board schematic to see how they are connected. We then discuss the Arduino Integrated Development Environment (IDE) which is used primarily to write, compile, and upload code. We survey the interface of the IDE and discuss how to install and use it. We also examine the use of shields to extend the functionality of an Arduino-based system. We discuss how Peripheral libraries provide a useful abstraction to facilitate programming.

C Programming

This module covers the basics of the C programming language which will be used to write code for the Arduino. The course first covers basic syntax, variables, and types. Most of the basic C operators are presented. Conditional statements (if, switch) and loops (while, for) are described. The concept of functions is presented together with how to define and call functions. Creation and use of global variables is explained.

Arduino Programs

This module describes the composition of an Arduino program, or sketch, and the process by which it is compiled and uploaded. The Arduino IDE is a user interface for the software tools which actually compile and upload the program. We outline the use of these tools in the build process. We describe the basic structure of a sketch, including the use of the `setup()` and `loop()` functions. The main interface of an Arduino is through its pins, so we describe how to access those pins from a sketch.

Arduino Project Design

This module designs the real world projects such as Temperature Measurement, Traffic Light Controller, Speed measurement of motor, Water level Controller.

Syllabus:

1) Arduino Environment: (10)

Arduino board: main components, inputs, and outputs, examine the board schematic
